Shadows A common feature in Photoshop Photoshop's shadows are useful for many different styles of photos. With shadows, you can make a photo look more dramatic and create a mood. Shadows can be used for: A More dramatic look Making photos more interesting and fun Setting a mood or look Illuminating a photo Adding life to a photo Shadows can make a photo more dynamic and give it a dramatic effect. They can be used to change the look of an image. A simple example is when shadows are used to make a photo look more rounded and soft. If you want a more crisp and objective look, then shadows can be used for that. Saturation Photoshop's saturation is a powerful tool. It gives a photo a more vivid look. Saturation changes the color of a photo. This can make a photo appear more saturated (filled with more color) or less saturated (more colorless). Saturation changes the gray balance. With saturated colors, the photo will have more contrast and will appear more complex to a viewer's eye. With less saturated colors, the photo will appear more monochromatic, which is a type of color with only a few hues. Highlights A common effect in Photoshop Highlights can be used to make a photo look brighter or duller. A glowing light often makes a photo look more fresh, while a dim light can make a photo look aged or dark. You can use the Highlights tool to make a photo appear more bright or dull than it actually is. Posterize Photoshop's Posterize tool can be used to make a photo look more flat or more life-like. Using the settings that are on the Tool Options bar, you can make a photo look more faded and more dimensional. Posterizing an image will give it a dark-looking texture. The more the image is posterized, the more it appears to be flat or concrete-like. Gradient Map A simple example of a gradient map is the gradient background in one of the figure examples. The color gradient can be adjusted on the Tool Options bar to make a photo appear more vibrant, duller, or even gray. Colors The colors feature allows you to use various colors in an image. With this tool, you can make an image look more vibrant, duller, or even gray. Using the colors tool, you can change the color of any area in a photo by erasing

The Liquify filter lets you do quick and dirty changes to an image without having to destroy an area of the photo. The Pen tool allows you to do quick vector drawings to use in place of raster The Gradient tool lets you create smooth, linear color transitions between two areas. The Dodge and Burn tools can create contrast between an image and a foreground or background. The Gradient tool lets you create smooth, linear color transitions between two areas. The Dodge tool can brighten or darken an image. The Smudge tool smoothes the edges of an image. You can also use the Eraser tool to either soften or harden the edges of an image. The Heal tool can make an image look more natural by healing the edges that have been smoothed over by the Blur tool. The Cookie tool is useful for creating highly stylized effects. Select and Create a Brush You can access Photoshop's Brush tool through the Brush palette (Cmd+Alt+B) located on the toolbar. By default, Photoshop stores 16 different brushes at one time. You can access a brush at any time by clicking on the Brush panel on the Brush palette. You can also create new brushes by clicking the Brush palette and choosing "Create Brush." Brushes are stored in different categories such as no brush, texture, complicated and so on. Brushes in each category can be accessed by opening the Brush palette and selecting the category. You can change a brush's settings by clicking on the down arrow next to the brush name and then selecting a setting. When you are creating a new brush, you will notice there are two different brush types in the Brush palette. The first type is called a default brush. The default brush is used for fast and easy drawing. The second type is called a texture brush. The texture brush can be used to mimic the look of a rubber, vinyl, or plastic surface. You can select a brush from the Brush palette by clicking on the brush name and then pressing the down arrow key. Or you can click the brush name to select a brush. A brush's size is set by two ways. The first is by clicking in the "Size" box located next to the brush name and changing the number. The second is by clicking the down arrow button located next to the brush name, then selecting a size from the drop-down menu. The brush color is set by clicking the small plus sign at the right end of the brush name and clicking in the
